

Get an Edge on Love with Pheromones

Simply put, pheromones are a form of chemical communication. These types of naturally occurring substances are highly important for animals and insects that use substance signals as their primary mode of communication. Although human emotions as well as our physical bodies are much more complex than that of animals and insects, the role that pheromones play in bringing in a human mate perform basically the same way these natural chemicals send out subconscious scent signals to the opposite sex. Pheromones are detected through an organ three inches within the nasal called the Vomeronasal Organ (VNO). When the VNO registers the pheromone, it sends a response signal to the brain.

Since pheromones are chemicals our bodies produce naturally, why would we need to also use products containing pheromones if we've been looking to enhance our relationships? Much of the reason is lifestyle. What do we do first thing in the morning or at night, and after exercising: take a shower. Soap, shampoo, and other personal care products wash off our natural pheromones! We also have a tendency to cover 90% of our skin when we acquire dressed everyday, so consequently we are not releasing pheromones into the air for a potential partner to subconsciously pick up on. But by supplementing lost pheromones with products containing those powerful substances, we're really "getting to nature" and re-establishing chemical connection with people around us. When applied on suitable spots (wrists, neck of the guitar, arms) a pheromone spray continues approximately 8-10 hours, or until you wash it off.

The powerful effects of human intercourse pheromones have been well researched and also substantiated. You may have seen stories about human pheromones on 20/20, Dateline NBC, Hard Copy, and other television programs. Newspapers from coast to coast, medical journals, and a variety of mags have featured stories about the amazing discovery of how human pheromones attract. Also keep in mind that many factors impact your affect on the opposite sex appearance, behaviors, and attitude but if you wear a pheromone spray in public, you can generally expect to attract much more attention. Will not expect girls to lose all their inhibitions and begin stalking you nor will men slay dragons or leave their spouse, but pheromones increase comfort, interest and arousal. Pheromones can help you to open up and talk, and encourage people to talk to you, but they can't allow you to compatible with everyone. You still need to make eye contact, smile, and be available.
