

Scientists Are Cracking the Code of Lovemaking Hormone balance and Attraction

We have long used the word chemistry to describe how well two people get along in the wild world of relationship. Little did we know how accurate the use of that word was. Scientists are now making daily advances as they work on cracking the code of sexual hormone balance and attraction. A few of the recent findings and products created based on them are astonishing.

Recent findings indicate which humans produce very powerful chemical compounds known as pheromones. The chemical tricksters can not be seen, sensed, or tasted, heard, or smelled, yet they have the power to be able to make people react using ways. There is a small organ inside the nose that has, until recently, not been found to be able to function any useful purpose. This organ, called the vomeronasal organ, has been shown to process pheromones and stimulate the limbic region of the brain, producing specific mental and physical responses. This particular discovery by scientists has helped in finding the code of sexual chemistry and attraction.

Dr. Virgil Amend has been studying the effects of human pheromones for quite some time. He or she recently introduced a topical blend of human pheromones for males that have been proven to have very powerful effects on women. Using this mixture of pheromones increases the sexual attraction women feel in the direction of a man by a number of degrees, making it more likely that they will respond favourably to be able to his attention.

Has been suggested that one of the many reasons men and women do not have as much hormone balance between them as they once seemed to, is the fact that many of the pheromones that are normally produced in the body are washed away by frequent washing or overpowered by scented soaps and laundry detergents, perfumes, and colognes. These kinds of substances manage to hide normal levels of pheromones.
